

King Contributes Legal Expertise to Panel Addressing Homelessness Issues

Mike King contributed his legal expertise to a panel of experts at The University of Tennessee's Winston College of Law for the symposium, "From Statute to Sidewalk – Legal and Policy Responses to Homelessness in our Community".

The symposium, hosted by the Tennessee Journal of Race, Gender, and Social Justice, was held Thursday, March 19th and explored how the legal system shapes the experience of the unhoused. Joined by Eric Lutton, Public Defender for Knox County, and Ryan Strain, Of Counsel and Pro Bono Chair at Baker Donelson, the panel led a discussion on "Homelessness and Housing Law: Representation, Responsibility and Reform".

Mike has practiced law for over thirty years and has significant experience in landlord-tenant matters representing owners and management companies on a range of housing issues. He frequently makes presentations on fair housing and landlord-tenant legal topics to property management companies, property owners, and members of the judiciary.
